I. INTRODUCTION AND PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

This Court indicated in its earliest tentative ruling (“TR”) that it was inclined to grant a preliminary injunction on procedural due process grounds unless the State could demonstrate that Labor Code Section 4615 provides a charged lien holder with an opportunity to be heard to challenge the application of the statute to his or her liens. TR at 2. When the State failed to satisfactorily explain its own statute and regulations, the Court ordered a second round of briefing. TR at 2. The Court expressly declined Plaintiffs’ offer to submit evidence of what is occurring “on the ground” to further illuminate the due process issues.

Now, faced with the State-submitted declaration of Paige S. Levy, the Chief Judge of the California Division of Workers’ Compensation, the Court gave the Plaintiffs a fair chance to reveal what is occurring in the California workers’ compensation courts and to address the seriously misleading declaration of Judge Levy. Judge Levy offers only anecdotal references to a handful of cases to support the State’s claim that workers’ compensation judges are providing due process to claimants affected by Section 4615. Judge Levy’s declaration is wholly refuted by the detailed declarations submitted concurrently with this brief and is contravened by the DIR and WCAB’s own publications, guidelines, procedures, manuals, recent public admissions, website, and press releases. As the Request for Judicial Notice, the Declarations and the attendant Exhibits show, Judge Levy is flat wrong. There is no due process afforded. Indeed, Section 4615’s lack of due process is so egregious that it is astonishing and offends the traditional notion of fair play guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. Matthews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319, 333 (1976) (“Parties whose rights are affected are entitled to be heard.”)

First, in the DIR website, the State tells the world that “the automatic stay prevents those liens from being litigated or paid while the prosecution is pending,” contradicting the State’s late contention that due process could be afforded through existing regulations. Second, the regulations providing procedures like Petitions

1 for Reconsideration and Petitions for Removal are inapplicable because they arise
2 only after a Court has issued an order. However, Section 4615 stays are imposed 3 not by judicial orders but by clerical actions performed in a backroom and 4 distributed to WCAB judges, typically by “flagging” the liens on the EAMS 5 system, resulting in their dismissal by operation of law, a situation in which the 6 workers’ compensation court does not hear the matter at all. Even Judge Levy 7 characterizes the “flags” as a “clerical” matter—and there is no regulation that 8 permits the challenge of a “clerical” matter. Third, even non-charged lien 9 claimants have had thousands of liens stayed in the system with no redress;
10 notably, lien claimants do not even receive notice that they are subject to a stay.
11 Fourth, WCAB judges have taken the position that the automatic stay divests them 12 of jurisdiction, and their collective responses to that lack of jurisdiction have 13 involved taking matters off-calendar, barring litigants from the courtroom and even 14 striking litigants’ names from sign-in sheets, warning them not to return to court.
15 Fifth, the statute provides no redress for a misidentified claimant or DIR overreach 16 in staying the liens of non-indicted, non-charged medical providers and groups.
17 Sixth, the RAND Corporation’s report (commissioned and published by the DIR 18 with Judge Levy’s input) admits that there is no opportunity for review of the 19 automatic stay. Seventh, in a stunning admission, Defendant Baker just last week
20 spoke at a conference in which she admitted that the stayed liens are not going
21 forward, bragging at the reach of Labor Code Section 4615, essentially thumbing 22 her nose at this Court, and perhaps in the belief that her public statements would 23 not make their way into the courtroom.

24 The Court asked for evidence of how Section 4615 is being applied, as a 25 procedural measure, “on the ground.” (TR at 3.) Plaintiffs submit declarations and 26 documentary evidence focused exclusively on the narrow issue of “[w]hether lien
27 holders affected by Section 4615 are currently denied access to the procedures 28 afforded by pre-existing regulations,” limited to the scope of the regulations and

1 statutes referenced by Judge Levy but including (as authorized by this Court)
2 administrative decisions similar to those that she submitted. (TR at 6.)

3 These declarations and documentary evidence demonstrate beyond all doubt 4 that lien claimants in a variety of situations—including even lien claimants who 5 should not be affected by Section 4615 at all but who have been erroneously 6 included on the DIR’s now-secret “stay lists”—have received no notice, are 7 afforded no hearing, and have no procedural escape from the Kafkaesque
8 nightmare created by Section 4615. The declarants include:

9 • A Bankruptcy Trustee facing the failure of a bankruptcy because he 10 cannot collect on liens related to providers who are the colleagues of a charged 11 providers and in one case, an uncharged provider (also a declarant in this matter) 12 who has the misfortune of having the same name as a charged provider.

13 • An experienced lawyer in the field of workers’ compensation law with 14 intimate familiarity with Labor Code Section 4615, workers’ compensation rules, 15 regulations, practice and procedure. His comparison of Judge Levy’s declaration 16 with the supposed procedural safeguards cited by the judge reveals that none of 17 those “safeguards” provide affected lien claimants with the ability to be heard—18 and some of the procedures cited by the judge would even subject lien claimants to 19 the risk of sanctions if they were to attempt to use them.

20 • A long-time hearing representative who has been barred from signing 21 in to lien hearings and who has personally witnessed workers’ compensation 22 judges refusing to allow lien claimants to sign in and then deeming those 23 claimants’ liens “voluntarily dismissed”—because of their failure to sign in.

24 • An attorney running a medical collections agency, collecting on liens 25 on behalf of those who have neither been charged nor indicted but whose liens
26 have been automatically stayed. This attorney has found that there is no procedure 27 to challenge such stays because they are issued by clerical staff, depriving lien 28 claimants of a judicial order that can be challenged through customary procedures.

1 • The managing director of a company that employs hearing
2 representatives throughout California. One of his clients, Firstline Health, has had 3 all its liens stayed because it is associated with a provider whose charges have 4 been dismissed. Attempts to correspond with the DIR to address the propriety of 5 the stay were ignored. Because the stay is clerically imposed, there is no judicial 6 order that can be challenged.

7 • A medical billing company's co-COO with a client whose liens are 8 stayed even though it has no proven connection with any charged or indicted 9 provider. This company's representatives have been barred from even entering the 10 courtroom, and have no access to the courts to explain why the stay is improper.

11 The State has had numerous opportunities to show how Labor Code Section 12 4615 comports with the fundamentals of procedural due process: notice and an 13 opportunity to be heard. In previous rounds of briefing, Plaintiffs have 14 demonstrated that as a facial matter, Labor Code Section 4615's automatic stay of 15 any and all liens filed by a charged or indicted provider violates procedural due 16 process.¹ Defendants have argued, through Judge Levy's declaration, that such 17 lien claimants can utilize the Declaration of Readiness process to raise "any kind of 18 issue" related to their liens, that they can file a Section 10450 petition to raise "any 19 kind of issue" related to their liens, that they can file a petition for reconsideration
20 of the stay, and that they can file a petition for removal. The overwhelming weight 21 of the evidence shows that in reality, no procedures are available to "save" Section 22 4615's fatal omission of any notice or hearing rights for affected claimants.

23 II. AN AUTOMATIC STAY WITHOUT ANY ATTENDANT PROCESS
24 IS A DUE PROCESS VIOLATION UNDER NINTH CIRCUIT LAW

25 The State has suggested that because Labor Code 4615 is simply a "stay," 26 there is no constitutional violation. Plaintiffs submit that as a practical matter, the 27

28 ¹ Plaintiffs assert that Section 4615 also violates substantive due process.

1 “stay” will often result in the dismissal of the claim, and that an indefinite stay
2 does deny due process. The Ninth Circuit’s decision in Wimberly v. Rogers, 557
3 F.2d 671 (9th Cir. 1997), directly addresses the point the Plaintiffs have 4 consistently raised – that barring lien claimants from the courts denies due 5 process. The Ninth Circuit held that a “mere” stay of a prisoner’s civil cause of 6 action until his release from custody was a denial of due process (“The rule of this 7 circuit is that: ‘This [i.e., due process] is governed by law and not by discretion’”) 8 and that the “indefinite stay of all proceedings is tantamount to a denial of due 9 process.” Id. (citing Peterson v. Nadler, 452 F.2d 754 (9th Cir. 1971)),

10 As demonstrated in the declarations, the stay cannot be challenged. Judge 11 Levy claims that due process could be provided by the hearing-setting process, 12 petitions for reconsideration or removal, or a letter to the DIR, but in reality, those 13 procedures do not equip the workers’ compensation courts to review an automatic 14 stay.² Judges are sending lien claimants away, taking cases off-calendar and in 15 some cases, even disallowing lien claimants from signing in and ordering them not 16 to return. A stronger case for the denial of due process is difficult to imagine.

27 ² The DIR was authorized by Section 4615 to promulgate regulations but has 28 failed to do so. The DIR has acknowledged that stayed liens cannot be litigated, and the RAND Report concludes that there is no review! (See RJN, Exhibits 1-4)

1 III. CONCLUSION

2 Based on the foregoing, Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court
3 GRANT their request for a preliminary injunction.
